Ana Martos

Discover the cradle of history and civilization: builders of the first roads, the first agricultural engineers, the first architects, doctors, pharmacists and astronomers. The incredible history of a pioneering people who possessed important knowledge of the world, even though they performed human sacrifices.

Synopsis

The Sumerians are a mixture of races. It is not known exactly where they came from, but by some aspects of their language they might have come from Central Asia as they were looking for fertile land when the oases of the last Ice Age began to dry up. They absorbed the people from El Obeid and created city-states along the great Euphrates and Tigris river basins.

Discover the civilization that was a pioneer in using the technologies that are the building blocks of those that we use today, such as hydraulic engineering, astronomy, mathematics, chemistry, medicine, Pharmacopoeia, or production on a large scale. They were also the first to use and teach law, literature and poetry, and they had a political, religious and social organization similar to ours.

Combining her historical rigor and the simplicity which characterize her writing, Ana Martos relates with mastery the vicissitudes of a people that has only been studied for slightly more than a century that has left us an immense cultural heritage and history

Biography

Ana Martos (Madrid) has lectured at numerous university conferences and courses related to ancient and medieval history. She has degrees in psychology, computer science, and music. In 1992 her dream of leaving the business world to take up writing became a reality. Since then she has traveled all over the world and has carried out a wide range of activities such as flying without motor and the interpretation of medieval music. She wrote Los 7 Borgia, Pablo de Tarso: ¿Apóstol o hereje?, Papisas y Teólogas, Brief history of Atila and the huns and Brief history of the condom.

Sales pitch

This new entry in the Brief History series stands out for its arduous documentation and its conclusions which are based on anthropological and sociological studies of prestige, such as those published by Robert Graves, James Frazer, Asimov or Samuel Kramer.

It explains the birth of our civilization, an indispensable requirement to understand our history. A work of a great literary quality and fluent narrative. The author complements her writing with tables and explanatory diagrams.
